NAFA is the world's oldest fur auction house, headquartered in Toronto, Canada. Our roots trace back to 1670, to the historic Hudson's Bay Company (HBC), which was created to market the finest furs from North America to the world. From the earliest days, the marketing of furs was done in a competitive environment, originally by a sealed bid and subsequently at public auction, in which the price level for each fur type was determined by supply and demand. The HBC operated out of London, England; Montreal, New York and Toronto from 1670 to 1992, after which time it became North American Fur Auctions.

Today, NAFA continues these age-old traditions, and holds competitive public auctions three to four times per year as the principal method of selling the finest collection of mink and the world's most diverse collection wild fur to the international market.
